MATTEL SHOWCASES INNOVATION, HOT ENTERTAINMENT LICENSES AND UNEXPECTED WAYS TO ENGAGE WITH ITS BRANDS AT NEW YORK TOY FAIR 2011

Diverse Portfolio Featuring New Introductions from Barbie®, Hot Wheels®, Fisher-Price®, Monster High™ and More, Reaches Fans Where They Are Today

EL SEGUNDO, Calif. – February 11, 2011 – As the leading toy maker and an expert in creating memorable play experiences, Mattel, Inc. (NASDAQ:MAT) unveils innovative new products that expand beyond the toy box at this year's New York International Toy Fair. As the leading toy company, Mattel boasts six of the top 10 properties in the toy industry¹, according to NPD, bringing its expertise in play to new and unexpected spaces, reaching kids and adults where they are, and where they play, today – like only Mattel can.

“As traditional play evolves and takes on new forms, so does our portfolio of brands,” said Tim Kilpin, Executive Vice President Mattel Brands. “One way in which we are continuing to grow our core brands, as well as to develop new franchises, is through transmedia storytelling. We’re developing branded content that further shapes play, ultimately driving brand engagement and deepening each play experience. Equally important is leveraging different media to tell each brand story in relevant and unexpected ways.”

“We know kids are the experts in play and we take pride in providing best-in-class products to further enhance their play experiences,” said David Allmark, Executive Vice President, Fisher-Price Brands. “With a fresh new collection of innovative toys and a new multi-media campaign launching later this year that celebrates developmental growth through the joy of play, we will continue to connect with families across the globe.”

This past holiday season, Barbie® reigned as the no. 1 property in the toy industry², maintaining relevance with girls of all ages as well as a strong presence at retail. Barbie® continues positive momentum in 2011 as the brand celebrates 50 years of Ken® as the “ultimate boyfriend for every occasion” with a series of epic events, partnerships and products.

Mattel is the expert in knowing how girls play and in 2010 developed a successful franchise for girls of all ages with the launch of the Monster High™ brand. Celebrated as the best-selling new fashion doll of the year³ in 2010, the Monster High™ franchise will become truly global in 2011 as it's rolled out worldwide across several categories including toy, publishing, web, apparel and accessories.

The company continues to successfully translate entertainment brands to toys and create long-term, sustainable properties with global product footprints. This year, Mattel adds some of the hottest, theatrical blockbuster licenses including -- Disney•Pixar's Cars 2, Green Lantern, Penguins of Madagascar and Kung Fu Panda 2 -- to its growing entertainment-licensed portfolio.

Growing core brands is an ongoing focus, and this year UNO® celebrates a milestone 40th Anniversary with the introduction of a new character, Roboto. Also, the Fisher-Price® Play Lab, a best-in-class facility that was also the first of its kind in the industry, celebrates its 50th anniversary, enabling Mattel to further lead the industry in research and insight into the way kids play.

Mattel's 2011 product line boasts rich transmedia storytelling, can be played across multiple platforms, and delivers an element of humor and fun. Mattel also continues to translate entertainment brands to toys better than anyone in the industry.
